THOUGHTS ON RESEARCH

By John E. Fetzer

In the 1920's, many of us were working with galena and silicon crystal radio sets. From that simple beginning evolved what we have today, known as the chip or transistor. That has brought on the space age of computerization. Instrumentation has become our lead to the study of energy and its application to mind and body reaction. The Foundation can bring forward through its research program this understanding through the physical, through the emotional, through the mental and through the spiritual wherein man unfolds unto himself the universality of oneness, the brotherhood, the sisterhood, the loving, leading to truth.

There is much in electromagnetic fields of science, pertaining to body transmission that needs study, in order to bring us to this understanding. One organ transmits consciousness to another. How does it do that? One gland transmits information to the body so that certain actions take place within it. How does it do that? Certain electrical pattern take place within the body and the brain that are called memory. Certain electrical magnetic transmissions take place in the body that show up in the consciousness of man, later on, as understanding, or as wellness or illnesses. All of these things can be researched in our long-range goal.

If you look into the mystical side of physics you will see that science, perhaps unknowingly, is ever teaching the path of the kundalini, of the chakras, and of the aura, and of the tree of good and evil and of the tree of knowledge and light. In this old pseudo-science is great wisdom that is yet to be unfolded and understood. I believe this understanding will precipitate the consciousness of oneness with the great creative intelligence in which we are all a part.

How that is developed and how that is understood and how that is presented should be a Foundation endeavor. It is stepping back in time, but if one looks at it in a different perspective and moves away from the mythology of alchemy and moves in to the patterning of medical science, one can begin to perceive that in the time of mysticism, and in the time of alchemy and mythology, there were great statements of fact presented. It was presented in the consciousness of that day. Now it is presented through the eyes of quantum physics. That approach is something that needs to be brought in constance with interpretations of the old mysticism and then be brought forward.

Such as understandings of the fire of the kundalini and the whirling vortexes of the chakras, and the colors of the auras, and the positive and the negative polarities of the flow of the channel of light of the kundalini, of the imbalances and the blockages that are created by these inharmonies within the body that end up blocking the flow of light and cause illness and, very often, death. There is a great science here that should be carefully studied.

This work has been done to some extent through the understanding of the chi powers from the east dealing with acupuncture and acupressure points in the body. But much more is yet to be understood and discovered. Scientific development has always been based upon the development of instrumentation. Instrumentation to prove a point and instrumentation to create a point to be proved. And so within the laboratory much is to be brought into scientific understanding.

THOUGHTS ON RESEARCH 3

If you look closely at the body patterns and study the flow of the nerve fluids and the actions of the genetic codes and the way the different glands function in their hormonal and in the secretion, you will find much to ponder. And if you look closely at the blood flow and how the chemistry of that blood changes and then look closely at the metaphysical interpretation from the past of the ethers of life and the flow of those ethers and the release of the karmic patterns in the body, and how it flows through the blood and is released at the heart center, you will begin to see some correlations. All that needs to be done is to establish new definitions for greater clarity.

In the laboratory, unbiased truth can be pursued. The fact that this may be classified as nothing more than ancient alchemy need not be a deterrent. We need to bring this mythology into the level of modern science.

I believe, now, the timing is right – for proof to be made and brought into the world. And it will be those few that will come together and will work together that are willing to take the risk and the ridicule to bring about this endeavor into the fulfillment so that others might see it and experience it and manifest it more fully into the world, as well.

Through instrumentation it will help promote a balance of mental consciousness from the level of physical manipulations of energies which will allow that individual to create the necessary mental structure and mental statement of affirmation and creativity.

However it is to be brought forward, healing is to manifest now for the individual in new and dynamic ways.

We must search out one avenue; one area in the beginning then let the ripple effect have its way to move the energy into the scientific community.
